While they were still living in Gainesville, their first child -- Kelly Faloona -- was born on June 16, 1966. Soon after, the family moved to Dallas, where Dr. Faloona accepted a teaching position at Bishop College, and Linda Fredrickson Faloona continued her nursing career. On March 27, 1968, their second child - Brandon Faloona was born in Dallas.

Sometime during 1971, the Faloonas separated. In 1972, Dr. Erwin Haeberle, a Sexologist associated with The National Sex Forum, began work on The Sex Atlas, which was intended to be a comprehensive educational text on human sexuality. In September of 1972, Dr. Laird Sutton, the photographer, asked if she and her children would pose for nude photographs, to be used in the Sex Atlas. Linda Fredrickson consented.
